

I strongly hope that the FCC will not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Since the implementation of this law my time at home has greatly improved. I no longer am afraid to answer the telephone fearing that I will accosted by an obnoxious telemarketeer. Indiana's law has been very effective in dealing with this scourge. I used to receive 20 calls per week, but now I may receive one. I hope that Indiana's standards are adopted nationwide, and anything less would be totally unacceptable.
